Printed 5/21/2026, 3:14:30 AM · 46 sections · 0 locked · 46 drafts

Operating Principles

Where things go. Philosophy → Brand Foundation. Service hierarchy → Service Architecture. Approved page text → Website Copy. Raw thinking, stories, and untested ideas → Raw Founder & Brainstorming. Polished captions, newsletters, press → Content & Social. Systems and backend → Operations. That separation is what stops the homepage from absorbing every passing thought.

The anti-drift rule. No more rewriting the homepage directly from emotional overwhelm. That has been the loop. From now on, the homepage is downstream of the Brand Foundation — not upstream of it.

What the brand actually is. You are no longer building a website. You are building a structured brand system. The website becomes an output of the system. That changes everything psychologically.

What you are NOT responsible for. Pre-organizing the intelligence. Perfectly polished thoughts. Final copy on the first try. Your job is extraction — pulling the valuable thinking out into a container. The container does the structuring.

What to do tonight, ever. Tonight's goal is never to finish the brand, solve the homepage, or rebuild the business. Tonight's goal is creating stable containers. That alone reduces mental noise massively.

Operating Rule: Before changing anything, ask: "Which folder does this belong in?" That one question will stop spiraling, overediting, homepage rewriting, philosophical drift, and scattered thinking.

1 — Core Brand Foundation

This never changes often. This is: "Who are we really?" · Outcome: This becomes the source of truth.

Brand Thesis

The two-layer brand — fast offer up front, deeper philosophy behind it.

The Two-Layer Brand.

Layer 1 — fast, clear, easy to buy. The public-facing offer language. Simple. Practical. Immediate. Action-oriented. This is where younger clients convert, impulse bookings happen, the resale pipeline starts, and recurring relationships begin. This is where the money starts.

Layer 2 — the deeper brand philosophy. The About page, interviews, social storytelling, brand voice, press, partnerships, long-term positioning. This is where "thoughtful stewardship," "continuity," "preserved value," and "the realities modern households quietly carry" all live.

The philosophy explains WHY you matter. The service offer explains WHAT TO CLICK. Those are different jobs.

Front of house: "Book a 4-Hour Reset." Back of house: this business is actually about continuity, dignity, value, and reducing invisible friction. Both are true. But only one gets the click immediately.

The real customer funnel: entry is a young professional booking a closet reset, move-in help, nursery setup, overflow organization, or resale pickup — and trusting you. Later, a parent needs help, an inheritance happens, a move happens, a divorce happens, downsizing happens, an estate transition happens. Suddenly you become the trusted person for the bigger life moments. The simpler services create the deeper relationships.

Brand positioning, simplified: practical stewardship with exceptional follow-through.

Founder Philosophy

Dayna's first-person belief about the work.

The most meaningful work is helping people feel truly taken care of. Competence does not eliminate the need to be cared for.

The work is never really about the object. It's about protecting the life it represents — making sure a family story doesn't disappear into a donation pile, and that the operational layer of a home stops quietly costing someone their bandwidth.

The philosophy as it applies to the work:

Over time, homes accumulate more than belongings. They accumulate deferred decisions, invisible friction, emotional weight, untold stories, and practical realities no one has had time to fully address.

My work is helping people thoughtfully restore clarity, functionality, and preserved value to the operational side of life — before it becomes overwhelming.

Whether through organization, resale, inventory, or House Calls, the goal is the same: helping people feel more supported by the spaces, systems, and belongings shaping their everyday lives.

Emotional Territory

The feeling the brand owns — the one no competitor has named.

We own the space before crisis. That is why it feels so emotionally charged.

The emotional promise — sacred line: "Someone thoughtful and competent is finally paying attention to the things that quietly matter."

This is not about "stuff." It is about: autonomy, memory, identity, family harmony, practical safety, preserving options, reducing burden after death, allowing grief to remain grief.

We are protecting families from having to turn mourning into project management.

The transition itself is: from invisible overwhelm → thoughtful continuity. That's the business.

Source: Well_Lived_Brand_Operating_System.docx — Why We Exist

Audience

Who we actually serve — one ecosystem, not separate segments.

Primary audiences, verbatim:

- Affluent adult daughters
- Emotionally intelligent professionals
- People managing complexity remotely
- Independent older adults
- High-functioning overwhelmed households

It immediately explains: affluent clients, independent adults, adult children, overwhelmed professionals, widows, transitions.

Younger professionals (late 20s–early 40s) book the quick resets, move-in help, nursery setup, overflow organization, and resale pickups. They are not a separate audience. They are the beginning of the relationship lifecycle — both the primary emotional market and the immediate revenue market — and they become the long-term client when a parent's situation, an inheritance, or a downsizing moment arrives.

The simpler services create the deeper relationships. Entry is a closet reset or resale pickup. Later: a parent needs help, an inheritance happens, a divorce happens, downsizing happens. Suddenly you are the trusted person for the bigger life moments. That is the long game.

Brand Archetypes

Three archetypes blended — not one.

The Steward — protective, thoughtful, responsible, long-view oriented.

The Operator — capable, systems-aware, calm under complexity.

The Confidante — trusted, emotionally intelligent, discreet.

Most important voice principle: never sound like you are "managing people." You are supporting continuity, preserving dignity, creating clarity, reducing friction, helping families navigate complexity thoughtfully.

Three phrases that feel most "you":

- Thoughtful stewardship for the realities of modern life.
- Preserving continuity, clarity, and value through life's transitions.
- Helping people feel more supported by the spaces and belongings that shape daily life.

Source: Well_Lived_Brand_Operating_System.docx — Brand Voice

Brand Promise

The one sentence the whole business is accountable to.

Practical stewardship with exceptional follow-through.

A private household stewardship company helping people navigate the emotional and operational realities of modern life before they become overwhelming.

Supporting language:

- You are a Steward of Continuity. Not in the legal sense. Not in the medical sense. In the human and operational sense.
- The trusted bridge between memory, value, function, and next steps.
- A household strategist and legacy steward who turns the invisible friction of life transitions into clarity, continuity, and preserved value.
- An architect of care-driven experiences.

You don't just organize things. You restore coherence.

Source: Well_Lived_Brand_Operating_System.docx — Who We Are + Strategic Frame

Differentiators

What we ARE and what we are NOT — both lists matter.

You combine: operational intelligence, emotional intelligence, resale discernment, systems thinking, relationship-driven service, observational care.

You notice what quietly stops working in people's lives before they fully recognize it themselves. That is the entire business.

Your edge is deeply human operational intelligence. Your magic is emotionally intelligent capability. That is your voice. That is your moat. That is your future brand category.

"Competence does not eliminate the need to be cared for." That is the emotional thesis of the business.

What we ARE:

continuity · stewardship · practical foresight · household functionality · thoughtful transition · preserved value · family clarity · operational calm · observational care.

What we are NOT:

caregiving · medical · financial · therapy · cleaning · handyman work · estate law · minimalism · "declutter culture."

Career throughline: in retail you weren't selling product — you were creating confidence, identity, relief, self-expression, trust, care, emotional safety. In outdoor / pandemic-era work you helped keep legacy skill and craft alive through sewing and outdoor utility — preservation, transmission, heritage, function, adaptability, resilience. In home + belonging stewardship the vehicle changed; the mission didn't. The common thread: designing solutions that make life function better in the real world. Seeing what's broken before it breaks people.

Source: Well_Lived_Brand_Operating_System.docx — What Makes Us Different

Tone Principles

How the brand sounds. Use the full attribute list — not the four-word summary.

The core feeling: "Someone competent and thoughtful is finally paying attention to the things that quietly matter."

The voice should feel:

observant · intelligent · grounded · capable · calming · emotionally perceptive · deeply trustworthy · quietly high-standard · human · unpretentious · thoughtful without being sentimental.

Tone calibration: aim for 70% grounded clarity / 30% emotional resonance.

Signature writing style — observational intelligence. The founder explicitly named this her signature style; these details create trust because they reveal "she notices what other people miss":

- the dead smoke detector
- the unreachable shelf
- the purse collection with no record
- the outdated Outlook subscription
- the lamp never replaced after a spouse passed
- the unsafe charger placement

Calm competence, not inspiration:

Weak: "Helping families declutter and simplify their lives."

Strong: "Often, the things creating the most stress in a household are the ones no one has had time to properly address."

Source: Well_Lived_Brand_Operating_System.docx — Brand Voice

Banned Language

Words and phrases that immediately break the voice.

Never use the brand name "Co." — the brand is The Well Lived Citizen. Full stop.

Bad words:

hustle · optimize · transform · simplify your life · clutter-free · self-care · elevate · empower · senior · aging · management · productivity · wellness · minimalist · dream home.

Phrases to avoid:

- "taking over"
- "handling seniors"
- "managing aging"
- "decluttering clients"
- "fixing homes"

Use instead:

- "thoughtfully addressing"
- "making daily life more functional"
- "creating clearer pathways"
- "preserving stories and value"
- "helping families prepare before urgency."

Also avoid: "girlboss" energy, "Pinterest perfection," before/after grids, productivity-culture language.

Source: Well_Lived_Brand_Operating_System.docx — Language Rules

Signature Language

Phrases that are uniquely WLC — use them on purpose.

Good words:

continuity · thoughtful · quietly · realities · stewardship · practical · preserved · functional · transition · observant · care · clarity · friction · belongings · household · capable · considered.

Signature IP / framework terms (designated for content, talks, partnerships, press angles, referral language):

- Invisible Friction
- Household Continuity
- The Operational Side of Living
- Deferred Decisions
- Practical Stewardship
- Belonging Ecosystems

Existing site lines flagged as strong:

- "When 'there has to be an easier way' becomes a business."
- "I'm built for your chaos."
- "For the things life leaves unfinished."
- "The operational side of a home, made visible again."

2 — Service Architecture

This keeps the business understandable. Stops "I do everything." · Outcome: This is a coherent ecosystem.

Service Hierarchy

The Well Lived ecosystem — entry → premium pathway, verbatim.

Entry Point — House Calls.

Immediate trust-building. Practical intervention. Family reassurance.

Continuity Layer — Household Stewardship.

Functionality. Organization. Access. Usability. Transition preparation.

Preservation Layer — Legacy Inventory & Story Stewardship.

Cataloging. Stories. Value tracking. Estate clarity. Belonging continuity.

Value Recovery Layer — Curated Resale & Placement.

Consignment. Routing. Liquidation strategy. Donation handling. Responsible dispersal.

Revenue sequencing:

- 1) Bookable Sessions — fast conversion, broad audience.
- 2) Resale Pickup — scalable, recurring, lead generator.
- 3) House Calls — trust builder, premium pathway.
- 4) Legacy Inventory — high-ticket emotional service later.

Source: Well_Lived_Brand_Operating_System.docx — Service Hierarchy

Entry-Point Offers

Conversion-language menu — Layer 1, approachable / modern / useful / not emotionally heavy.

The bookable session names that convert (verbatim founder list):

- "Book a 4-Hour Reset"
- "Closet + Consignment Session"
- "Move-In Reset"
- "New Baby Home Setup"
- "Overflow Edit"
- "House Call"
- "Post-Event Reset"
- "Closet to Cash"
- "Pickup & Resale"
- "Home Catch-Up Session"

The Reset — 4-hour organization + functionality session. Examples: closet resets, kitchen catch-up, nursery setup, post-move unpacking, room functionality, donation sorting.

Modern Move Reset — $1,200/day flat for full-day move support.

Both are price-gated and paid upfront. No discovery call required.

Pricing Concepts

Live rate card pulled directly from welllivedcitizen.com.

Home Organization & Modern Move

- Hourly: $150/hr · 3-hour minimum.
- 10-hour Flex Block: $1,250.
- 25-hour Flex Block: $3,150.
- Studio / 1BR Move Reset: $1,200/day flat — up to 8 hours straight.
- Larger homes & multi-room projects: quoted after a call.

Legacy Planning & Inventory Catalog

- Single room or storage unit: $175/hr · 2-hour minimum.
- Whole home: project pricing after walkthrough.

House Calls

- $175/hr · 2-hour minimum (or productized $350 quick-buy version where applicable).

Curated Resale & Consignment

- Commission-based · agreement required.

Flex Blocks never expire. The $1,200 Move Reset is reserved for studios and 1-bedroom moves only. Larger homes scope as projects after walkthrough.

Service Descriptions

Verbatim Service Tiles from the Brand OS doc.

The Reset.

4-hour organization + functionality session. Examples: closet resets, kitchen catch-up, nursery setup, post-move unpacking, room functionality, donation sorting.

House Calls.

Practical household help for busy professionals, independent adults, and families managing life from a distance. Examples: tech setup, accessibility improvements, safety updates, home functionality, household catch-up, recurring visits.

Consignment & Resale.

Pickup or send your items. We identify the best resale route, manage listings, and recover value from the things you no longer need.

Legacy Inventory.

Thoughtful documentation of collections, belongings, and household histories for future clarity and preserved value.

Open naming decision (founder-flagged): "Home Organization & Modern Move" drops into generic organizer-industry language and is too generic compared to the sophistication of the rest. What it actually is: friction reduction, household functionality, move continuity, access optimization, transition preparation. Repositioning is an open decision.

Best service names per founder: House Calls (strongest by far); Curated Resale & Consignment (clear, commercially believable); Legacy Planning & Inventory Catalog (emotionally compelling but slightly too long).

Recurring Pathways

How clients become long-term relationships.

Ongoing Continuity — $175/hr minimum, relationship-based. Supports long-term clients with seasonal resets, travel prep, remote family check-ins, and the small accumulating frictions that nobody else is tracking.

The path is: House Call → Reset → Flex Block → Continuity. Each step is built on the trust earned in the previous one.

The simpler services create the deeper relationships. That is the long game.

Source: Complete_Site_Copy.txt + Brand OS docx — Real Customer Funnel

Add-Ons

Pre-buy bundles that ride alongside a session.

Pre-Buy Org Bundles (sourced and installed during the session):

- Starter — $150 — 5 bins + a cart
- Mid — $250 — 10 bins + divider sets
- Full — $500 — 20 bins + canisters + hangers

Bundles are swappable for equal value based on what the project actually needs once we're in the space.

Source: Complete_Site_Copy.txt

Retention Model

Why clients stay — and how the next sale happens without selling.

Relationship-driven ease. Clients start with the simple things — a reset, a resale pickup — and WLC becomes the trusted person for the bigger life moments later (inheritance, downsizing, estate transitions).

Retention is built through Observational Care: noticing and quietly solving small household frictions before the client has to ask. The same skill that notices the dead smoke detector, the unreachable shelf, the lamp never replaced after a spouse passed, the unsafe charger placement — that's what turns a one-time booking into a five-year relationship.

We are building the company that notices the signals before they become emergencies. Making invisible household realities visible again.

Source: Well_Lived_Brand_Operating_System.docx — What We Do + Voice

Resale Funnel

End-to-end resale flow, low-friction by design.

Entry: client texts a photo to (323) 433-1350. No agreement signed until they see the estimated listing price.

Routing: items go by category to Poshmark, eBay, or private collectors based on what will actually sell where. Pickup or send.

Commission: tiered 45%–65% to WLC, which covers intake, photography, platform listing, and buyer management.

Payout: monthly reporting by the 1st, payout by the 10th.

Positioning: "Pickup or send your items. We identify the best resale route, manage listings, and recover value from the things you no longer need."

House Calls Framework

The spirit of the company, productized.

House Calls is the operational middle — the tasks that sit between legal, moving, and daily life. The friend, neighbor, or adult child who used to handle it.

Verbatim service tile: practical household help for busy professionals, independent adults, and families managing life from a distance. Examples: tech setup, accessibility improvements, safety updates, home functionality, household catch-up, recurring visits.

What's inside: home check-ins, tech setup, supply runs, vendor oversight, guest-ready resets, the appliance install nobody booked, the donation run nobody had time for.

Live pricing on welllivedcitizen.com: $175/hr · 2 hr minimum · $500/mo Continuity Retainer. No membership, no subscription.

(The 4-Hour Practical Reset is a Home Organization service per founder, not a House Call — even though the live site currently shows it on the House Calls page. Fix on site.)

Open thread from the brand doc: a "$350 quick-buy" productization was floated once as an exploratory idea — never went live. If she wants to bring it back as a fixed-price entry, that's a separate decision.

Note: the line "I'm built for your chaos." belongs to the homepage hero, not to this offer. House Calls has its own voice — quieter, observational, the missing person.

Source: Well_Lived_Brand_Operating_System.docx — House Calls tile

3 — Website Copy

This becomes modular. One page = one container. Edits stop affecting the entire brand. · Outcome: Each page is locked independently, so changing one stops collapsing the others.

About

Founder belief + credibility + positioning — verbatim drafts.
competence does not eliminate the need to be cared for.

I have always been drawn to the life that lives inside people's most treasured possessions — the objects around which identity is formed, whether subtly or boldly.

A jacket is never just clothing when it carries the memory of the woman who wore it and the nights she spent wrapped in it beside the love of her life.

A record is never just vinyl when it still holds the rebellion, risk, and moment that brought it into the world — an era in which music helped bring authority to its knees.

A closed closet door is never just storage when it still tells the story of a marriage, a career, a season of confidence, or the person someone once was.

That instinct has followed me my entire life.

That is the heart of this work.

I do not believe people simply need help getting rid of things. I believe they need help understanding what those things mean, what they are worth, what they still have left to do, and where the next chapter of those belongings belongs.

Sometimes that means preserving. Sometimes it means cataloging, resale, or making sure a family story does not disappear into a donation pile.

The work is never really about the object. It is about protecting the life it represents.

After an unforeseen flood, I found myself moving through 13 temporary homes and Airbnbs, carrying only fragments of the life I thought I would always recognize. Years of belongings, valuables, and deeply personal objects were damaged or lost — many of them irreplaceable.

When it was my life, my loss, my dog beside me in a storage unit, and no clear sense yet of what the next version of home would be, I came face to face with something essential. During that season, I was introduced to someone who, on paper, might have simply been called a home organizer. But what she offered was something far deeper.

She was not organizing. She was relief.

For more than 15 years, I have built my career creating environments that help people function beautifully in real life. I have led large-scale operations, teams, and transformation initiatives for national brands, designing systems that solve invisible friction before it becomes visible failure.

That same philosophy now lives inside The Well Lived Citizen.

I bring together executive-level operational thinking, emotional discernment, resale and recoverable-value expertise, and a deep reverence for story, memory, and belonging. I do not see homes as projects. I see them as living systems shaped by identity, family, safety, and transition.

At the core, I believe the most meaningful work is helping people feel truly taken care of. That is what this business was built to do.

The operational layer of home, handled.

LA organization, transitions, house calls + resale

Founder-led by Dayna Brown

Source: Well_Lived_Brand_Operating_System.docx — About

Services (Overview)

The page that points to all four service pillars.

H1: Your home, made to work for how you actually live.

Opener (verbatim from LA Concierge): "Choose the part of life that feels most like where you are right now. The rest gets built around that anyway."

Body: Concierge home and life services for organization, transitions, house calls, and resale. From 4-hour resets to whole-home legacy cataloging, we handle the operational layer of home.

Closer (verbatim): "Not sure where to start? Start anywhere. No pressure. The whole point is to make your life easier to navigate from here."

CTA: SEE ALL SERVICES & PRICING.

NOTE (founder-flagged, OPEN): a finished standalone Services page draft does not yet exist as a single verbatim piece — the service tiles are the closest drafted material. This page is open for input.

FAQs

OPEN — founder marked this as not yet drafted in the Brand OS doc.

[Not yet answered — open for input. The 21-page Brand OS doc did not contain a finished answer for this section.]

Source: Well_Lived_Brand_Operating_System.docx — flagged open

Resale Page

The page that turns a closet into cash without the client managing it.

H1: Piece-by-piece resale routing from someone who knows the platforms.

Sub: Converted to cash without you having to think about it.

Body (verbatim from Service Tiles): Pickup or send your items. We identify the best resale route, manage listings, and recover value from the things you no longer need.

Resale is not a dumping ground — it's judgment, timing, and market fit. We handle intake, photography, platform matching, and buyer communication. You fill the bag; we handle the rest.

CTA: Send a photo to (323) 433-1350.

NOTE: a standalone Resale page beyond this tile copy is open for input.

House Calls Page

The live House Calls service page on welllivedcitizen.com.

H1: For the things life leaves unfinished.

Sub: For when the issue isn't the room — it's the person you used to have to call.

Body: Practical household help for busy professionals, independent adults, and families managing life from a distance. Examples: tech setup, accessibility improvements, safety updates, home functionality, household catch-up, recurring visits.

Once I know how your home works, it becomes easy for me to help keep it working. Tech setup, appliance installs, donation runs, or just a trusted eye on a vendor day. The goal is to make everyday life feel safe and manageable.

Pricing (live on site, corrected):

- Hourly: $175/hr · 2 hr minimum
- Continuity Retainer: $500/mo

No membership. No subscription. Ease comes from relationship, not a forced plan.

CTA: Book me.

(Fix-on-site note: live page currently lists "4-Hour Practical Reset" here, but per founder that's a Home Organization service, not a House Call. Remove from this page; it lives on the Home Organization page.)

(The full live page is in the alternate below — same fix-on-site note applies there.)

Legacy Inventory Page

The high-emotion preservation page.

H1: Clarity for the things life leaves unfinished.

Sub: The operational side of a home, made visible again.

Body (verbatim from Service Tiles): Thoughtful documentation of collections, belongings, and household histories for future clarity and preserved value.

This is not legal estate planning — it's planning the actual pieces of a life. We document, honor, and route objects with stories before the weight falls on the people you love.

Pricing: single room or storage unit — $175/hr · 2-hour minimum. Whole home — project pricing after walkthrough.

CTA: See how inventory and legacy support works.

NOTE: a standalone Legacy Inventory page beyond this tile copy is open for input.

Home Organization & Modern Move Page

The live service page for the entry-point organization offer.

01 — HOME ORGANIZATION & MODERN MOVE

"The relief of the room."

Your home, made to work for how you actually live. For the room that keeps collecting piles, the move that technically happened but never settled, the closet that no longer fits your life, or the spaces where everyday friction quietly steals time.

The issue here is the space itself. The room, layout, volume, or systems are no longer supporting the way you naturally move through your day. I come in, find the friction, and make the space work around your real habits.

HOW WE CAN WORK TOGETHER

- Side-by-side guided sessions
- Hybrid decision blocks
- Full key handoff
- Solo resets while you're away
- Packing and move prep with or without you
- Closet and system continuity after landing

The right style is the one that creates the easiest lasting outcome.

WHAT'S INCLUDED

Intake call, prior coordination, and any pre-planning on my end · layout logic · sourcing recommendations · setup and install · label systems · pre-order coordination · workflow tools and install basics · measuring tools, reusable sort bins · cord wraps, Velcro, adapters, and utility hardware.

For deeper spaces like closets, offices, storage rooms, and linen systems, product support is quoted after walkthrough based on hidden volume and actual dimensions.

PRICING

- Hourly: $150/hr · 3 hr minimum
- 10-hour Flex Block: $1,250
- 25-hour Flex Block: $3,150
- Studio / 1BR Move Reset: $1,200/day flat — up to 8 hours straight
- Larger homes & multi-room projects: quoted after call

Flex blocks never expire. $1,200 flat rate is reserved for studio and 1-bedroom moves only. Larger homes scope as projects.

A NOTE ON LABELS

Labels are always included — handwritten on-site by default, and printed sets provided for larger project scopes.

NOTE: founder flagged the name "Home Organization & Modern Move" as the one service name that drops into generic organizer-industry language. Repositioning is an open decision per the Brand OS doc.

Visual Direction

Verbatim founder visual brand audit — what's working, what's missing.

What works:

- restrained palette
- editorial spacing
- calm sophistication
- understated luxury
- no "Pinterest organizer" energy

What's missing visually:

- humanity
- texture
- lived-in intelligence
- emotional realism

Direction: imagery and details that feel deeply observed, believable, quietly intimate — not staged luxury. Right now the tone risks feeling literary, conceptual, distant.

Source: Well_Lived_Brand_Operating_System.docx — Visual Direction

Booking Language

OPEN per founder — current draft is a working placeholder, not verbatim.

Tell me what changed. You do not need to have it figured out.

Start with what is true right now and I will take it from there. Two sentences is enough.

NOTE: the 21-page Brand OS doc did not contain a finished Booking Language draft. This is a working placeholder pulled from the Brand Content Vault.

4 — Raw Founder & Brainstorming

Messy thoughts allowed. Stories, metaphors, untested CTAs, alternate headlines, draft ideas — anything that isn't ready to be page copy yet. · Outcome: Ideas have somewhere to live so they stop spilling into the homepage. Nothing here is canonical until it's promoted into Website Copy or Content & Social.

Story Bank

Signature observational-intelligence details. These create trust because they reveal 'she notices what other people miss.'
Reference these, don't reinvent them.

Founder-designated signature details (verbatim from the Brand OS doc):

- the dead smoke detector
- the unreachable shelf
- the purse collection with no record
- the outdated Outlook subscription
- the lamp never replaced after a spouse passed
- the unsafe charger placement

Recurring stories Dayna returns to — reference these, don't reinvent them:

- Gayle — the 84-year-old neighbor whose life was made easier by small technical and organizational removals of friction.
- The Flood — Dayna's personal experience moving 13 times in a year, which taught her the value of objects that "reflect you back to yourself."
- The China — the incomplete set that no one wants but shouldn't be trashed; the core of Legacy work.
- Stevie's Capes — how objects hold identity and memory across decades.

Founder Metaphors & Object Reflections

Longer-form emotional writing — vinyl, museum, storage-unit, jacket-and-record reflections. Material for essays, About-page texture, interviews, press narratives. Not homepage copy.

[Paste long-form emotional reflections here — the vinyl references, museum references, storage unit scenes, jacket-as-memory writing, Stevie scarves long-form, the philosophical observations that don't fit into a service tile. Experimental Headlines & CTAs

Alternate homepage lines, CTA tests, service-naming ideas, button language you want to try. Lives here until tested, then either promoted to Website Copy or deleted.

[Drop headline experiments and CTA variations here. Examples format:

HEADLINE TEST · for Homepage

"Practical help for the parts of life that quietly pile up."

"Thoughtful stewardship for the realities modern households quietly carry."

"For the things life leaves unfinished."

CTA TEST · for House Calls

5 — Content & Social

Polished, ready-to-publish content — captions, newsletters, press boilerplate, hashtag sets. Things that are ready to go out the door. · Outcome: A library of approved content assets that match the brand voice, separate from raw founder thinking.

Content Pillars

Built on the signature IP / framework terms designated for content, talks, partnerships, press, referral language.

Six signature IP / framework terms — every piece of content laddered to at least one of these:

1. Invisible Friction — the things creating the most stress in a household are the ones no one has had time to properly address.
2. Household Continuity — the long view of a home across moves, transitions, life shifts.
3. The Operational Side of Living — making invisible household realities visible again.
4. Deferred Decisions — what accumulates when no one has had time to choose yet.
5. Practical Stewardship — competence + care, in equal measure.
6. Belonging Ecosystems — objects, stories, and the lives they hold.

Recurring themes that ladder up:

- The Operational Middle — tasks between legal, family, and daily life.
- Moves & Landings — closing the gap when the boxes arrive but the home isn't "settled."
- Object Judgment — the value of story and knowing what deserves resale effort.
- House Calls — productized trusted help for "the thing a neighbor used to do."

Sample Posts & Captions

Voice references for Instagram and resale captions.

Instagram (founder voice):

"A client in Seattle once said it out loud — 'there has to be an easier way' — and that became a business. I'm Dayna. I'm built for your chaos. Text me — (323) 433-1350."

Calm-competence post pattern (founder example):

Weak: "Helping families declutter and simplify their lives."

Strong: "Often, the things creating the most stress in a household are the ones no one has had time to properly address."

Resale caption template (closet):

"Custom fur, mid-'80s. One of ten coats a husband had made for his wife. The story is the point. Fits like a modern medium. Link in bio."

Email / Newsletter Voice

How the newsletter sounds — different from the homepage.

Crisp, practical, observational. Essay voice. Starts with a specific household moment (the dead smoke detector, the unopened box from the move, the chair that nobody sits in, the lamp never replaced after a spouse passed) and uses it to explain the Invisible Friction of modern life.

Tone calibration: 70% grounded clarity / 30% emotional resonance.

Never starts with "Hi friends!" Never ends with "stay well."

Press / PR Boilerplate

Lift-and-use bio for press outreach.

Dayna Brown is the founder of The Well Lived Citizen, a Los Angeles-based private household stewardship company. Her background spans executive operations, luxury client services, and founder-led product development — including designing, prototyping, and building a turnkey drop-ship product solution for the outdoor industry. She helps individuals and families navigate the emotional and operational realities of modern life — across organization, resale, inventory, and House Calls — bringing operational intelligence and rigorous follow-through to life's transitions.

Positioning line: "I build elegant, real-world solutions for the friction people have learned to live with."

6 — Operations

The execution brain — workflows, intake, checklists, dashboards, AI workflows. · Outcome: Operational intelligence becomes scalable.

Client Intake Workflow

Text-first, by design.

Text-first entry. A text closes a conversation in hours; a form sits in an inbox.

Three questions for every new client:

1. What changed?
2. What's the real-life version of what's happening?
3. What needs to happen first?

The goal of intake is not to qualify — it's to land the client in the right service in one exchange.

Founder principle: families need someone they trust to translate life, belongings, logistics, memory, and safety into a clear path forward.

Onboarding Checklist

Repeatable steps for every new booking.

- ☐ Confirm payment handle (Zelle or Stripe).
- ☐ Text initial discovery questions.
- ☐ Schedule the 2-hour House Call or 4-hour Reset.
- ☐ Send 24-hour cancellation policy reminder the day before.
- ☐ Day-of: confirm address, parking, building access, any pets/people in the home.

Booking Process

Step-by-step from click to confirmation.

1. Client selects "Book a 4-Hour Reset," "Schedule a House Call," or "Send a Consignment Bag" via Cal.com.
2. Price is gated — payment taken upfront via Stripe ($350 House Call, $500 Reset, $1,200 Modern Move Reset).
3. Automatic confirmation includes the "What changed?" prompt.
4. Dayna confirms slot via text within the day.

Resale Process

End-to-end resale operations.

1. Client texts photo of item to (323) 433-1350.
2. Dayna quotes estimated listing price and pickup window.
3. Pickup / handoff via Uber Business or courier.
4. Resale agreement signed only after item is in Dayna's possession and value is validated.
5. Monthly reporting by the 1st. Payout by the 10th.

Follow-Up Systems

How a closed client becomes a repeat client.

Referral Receipt habit — every closed client gets a text:

"If anyone you know would benefit, my number is the easiest way to send them my way."

Repeat clients are migrated to Flex Blocks for ongoing continuity. Once a client buys a second time, they stop being a transaction and start being a relationship.

Founder principle: you are building the company that notices the signals before they become emergencies.

AI Workflows & Prompts

How AI tools plug into the Brand OS without destabilizing voice.

Founder rule, verbatim: "You need ONE 'master brain.' Not 14 disconnected tools. We need one central operating document. Everything else references THAT."

This Brand OS is that master brain. Any new content (caption, email, page copy) must start by pasting the relevant folder section into the prompt window — Core Brand Foundation first, then the specific folder being worked on.

This is what stops voice drift into generic AI filler. The model gets the constraints (banned language, signature language, tone calibration of 70% grounded clarity / 30% emotional resonance) before it gets the request.

Dashboards & Tools In Use

The actual stack — keep this current.

- Admin Dashboard — site-url/admin.html for editing business info (Zelle handle, Stripe handle, phone number).
- Zelle + Stripe — frictionless payment.
- Cal.com — price-gated booking.
- Poshmark + eBay — resale sales engines.
- Uber Business — pickup logistics for resale.

Service Delivery Checklists

What "done" looks like for each main service.

Start-Up Bundle (move-in / arrival reset):

- ☐ Bed made.
- ☐ Bathroom functional.
- ☐ Kitchen essentials unpacked.
- ☐ Devices charged and named.
- ☐ Donation bags routed.

Home Organization session:

- ☐ Layout logic established.
- ☐ Sourcing and installation done in-session.
- ☐ Label systems applied.
- ☐ Workflow tools (caddies, trays) placed where used, not where pretty.
- ☐ Cord and utility hardware reset.
